At least twenty-two states have some local legislative history behind their enactment of the UCC. Contained in hearings, studies, or reports, such history is especially valuable in explaining any non-uniform amendments a state has made. Some of the states’ legislative history appears as state comments to each section, in addition to the official comments. Another set of state materials is the New York Law Revision Commission’s study and report on the UCC, which had a major impact on the current version of the UCC.

Footnotes

Source URL: https://library.nclc.org/cwl/010403-0